Each Day There Is a Little Love in a Book for You*, a poem by Lily Herman. A Dryad Chapbook.

Some books fit in your pocketbook. All the better, I say, because this book is all you need to know about love in 27 pages—its hunger, its thirst, its expressionistic appearances when least expected. For to love someone is to constantly reclaim love every day; and among all the tools given us, the engine is still possession. The arguments for that sometimes look like contrition, uncertainty, certainty, surrender - and always reclamation. Love is a venture. Make no mistake about it. The poet sees it sideways. And love spoken in verse is only commensurate to the talent of the speaker. Herman has it. She is terrifyingly accurate.
